

Transfer Statistics for the Barnard Intercollegiate Program (ICP)

Barnard College released a list of 301 former ICP participants, some going back more than 20 years. (The earliest LaGuardia graduation date was Spring 1992.)

After matching most on social security numbers, I manually searched for name matches. In this way I found six of the missing SSNs and corrected 23 mistakes in SSNs as well. In the end, only one name on the list could not be matched to a valid social security number.

Of the 300 students, 174 had transferred to 4-year colleges (58.0%) according to the National Clearing House. In addition, 11 had transferred to 2-year colleges (3.7%). These students transferred to 57 different colleges (including transfers back to LaGCC—see attached table). Of the 185 transfers, 64% went to CUNY colleges and 12% went to SUNY schools.

Of the 300 students, 200 graduated from LaGuardia (66.7%). Of the 200, 135 graduated and transferred to 4-year colleges. That is, 67.5% of the graduates transferred to 4-year colleges.

LaGuardia's most recent rate for the 2003 Fall cohort for the percentage of graduates who transfer to 4-year colleges is 60.8% within five years. This is not quite comparable to the 67.5% rate, because the graduates on the ICP list had been out an average of nine years, while one-quarter of them had been out fewer than five years. The national transfer to a 4-year college rate, however, for five-years after community college graduation is 18.3%.
